

Rowan College at Gloucester County turns 50 (PHOTOS)

Updated on September 28, 2017 at 1:51 PM Posted on September 28, 2017 at 1:01 PM

20

Gallery: Rowan College at Gloucester County turns 50

Comment

32_{shares}

By Joe Brandt

jbrandt@njadvancemedia.com,
For NJ.com

SEWELL - Rowan College at Gloucester County first held classes 50 years ago in a farmhouse and barn that had been revamped into classroom space. It was Gloucester County College back then.

Since 2014, the college on Tanyard Road has been RCGC, reflecting a partnership with Rowan University. The history of the college, including its birthday (or anniversary, if you prefer) was celebrated at an event on Wednesday.

Besides the speeches and an employee barbecue, the college archivist hosted an exhibition, and there was a dedication of three wind sculptures from Utah-based artist Lyman Whitaker.

The Ross Beitzel Art Gallery on campus hosted a "Meet the Artists" event on campus that concluded at 2 p.m.

Joe Brandt can be reached at jbrandt@njadvancemedia.com. Follow him on Twitter @JBrandt_NJ. Find NJ.com on Facebook.